About the New School of Music

The New School of Music was founded in 1976 by composer, conductor and musician, Nicholas Van Slyck with a mission to provide a community music school for students of all ages, levels of training and financial means. Our audience includes children, youth, and adults, starting with students as young as infants. We serve approximately 300 music learners of all skill levels and experience in private lessons and group classes each year from within the Cambridge and greater Boston area.

True to our founding vision, The New School of Music maintains a focus on our original purpose of Music for All with affordable programs in a non-competitive, student centered learning environment. The New School of Music's teachers are active professionals with expertise in music education in addition to their extensive performing resumes.
